REPUBLICAN CALL.
HEADQUARTERS REPUBLICAN STATE
CENTRAL COMMITTEE OF COLORADO
DENVER, COL., JUNE 12, 1878.
At a meeting of the Republican State Central committee, held at this place, it was decided that the State Republican convention be held on the 7th of August, 1878, at Denver Colorado, for the purpose of nominating a candidate for one governor, one lieutenant governor, one secretary of state, one state treasurer, one auditor of state, one superintendent of public instruction, two regents of the University, one attorney general, and one representative in congress, and transact such other business as may be deemed necessary. The committee fixed the basis of representation in this convention at one delegate for each county, and one delegate for every one hundred votes or fraction thereof exceeding fifty, polled for Governor Rount at the general election in 1876. In accordance with the above the following apportionment for representation was determined upon:
Arapahoe 23 Jeff 6
Boulder 16 Lake 3
Bent 4 Larimer 5
Costilla 5 La Plata 2
Conejos 4 Las Animas 8
Clear Creek 12 Ouray 4
Custer 3 Park 6
Dodge 4 Pueblo 6
Elbert 1 El Paso 5
El Paso 1 San Juan 2
Fremont 1 Saguache 4
Gilpin 1 Grand 3
Grand 2 Summit 3
Gunnison 1 Weld 3
Hinsdale 5 Total 177
The Committee requests the various counties to make, as soon as practicable, provision for the selection of delegates.
W. H. PIERCE, Chairman.

LABOR PROBLEM.
Mr. Boutwell, a careful statistician, states that the laboring man can buy twice as much of the actual necessities of life in 1878 with his present wages as the laboring man of 1860 could with his. This factually answers the arguments of greenbackers. The trouble with our laboring men is that they don't use their earnings properly, but that they receive too little. Over $30 per capita is spent in New York per year for lager beer. Many a laboring man in that city spends from $200 to $300 yearly for beer alone and then talks about the iron boat of capital, etc. We don't want any more apostles of cheap money, idle work and big wages, but apostles of economy and sobriety. The greenbackers and their demagogic friends in the democratic party have done incalculable harm to the laboring class of this country. They have made them believe that the poverty of their families is due to evil legislation instead of to the fact that half of their wages go for tobacco and liquor.
In some parts of the country laboring men feel insulted if you mention the great virtues of economy and temperance to them. Only last fall a candidate for office was nearly defeated though his party had several thousand majority for suggesting a frugal, inexpensive yet substantial diet for the poorer classes. A lady was nearly mobbed last winter in College City, Long Island, for showing the people how a family of six or eight persons could be supported on four or five dollars a week.
We might say here that the laboring men referred to are the dissatisfied strikers, labor reformers, greenbackers and all those who are joining in this absurd hue and cry about the oppression of capital hard times, etc.—men who want ease and prosperity without the practice of industry, frugality and temperance. The idle twaddle of this new school of finance has pampered and fed such desires until they will not listen to the only advice which will give to them relief. There will be a reaction soon. The sober sense of the American laborer at least will soon detect the sophistry of all these isms, for they know that man must earn his bread by the sweat of his brow.

In February of this year silver was $55 per ounce. At present it is quoted at 52 1/2 per ounce. This decline is owing partly to the decrease in the exports of the silver to the East. During the first six months of 1877 over $40,000,000 in silver was exported to the East while during the same time this year only $20,000,000 have been exported. We trust the international monetary commission will suggest some practical solution of this whole question before congress meets. The silver bill over which there was so much ado is not succeeded in keeping the value of silver from falling much less in adding to its value. Perhaps some of our statesmen will learn before the next session of congress that there are many potent influences affecting the value of silver, and that mere legislation can not make its value stable.

Hayes' appointment of Merritt as collector of the New York custom house causes the home-coming of Conkling to call for a republican state convention to express their indignation against the treacherous and detestable act of the president in suspending Arthur and Cornell in a plot form that Hayes can understand as readily as King George could read the signature of bold-handed John Hancock.
The Vickburg Herald (Dem) thus kindly refers to President Hayes' recent appointment of a black man to the postmaster ship of that city. A man who is thoroughly respected wherever he is known, and in Holly Springs where he was raised he is shown all the courtesies and deference due to any good citizen.
Burt, the successor of that indefatigable wire puller Cornell served on the first civil service commission appointed by Grant, and has always been a determined foe to the spoils system. We may expect action on his part to clear the Custom House from the bad reputation it has so long sustained.
Gen Banks is rapidly losing ground. His speech in Boston recently savored too much of blood. The people of Massachusetts want to see the civil service purified and our finances placed upon an enduring basis rather than a revival of sectional issues.
A man was hanged $15 in Denver Tuesday for carrying concealed weapons. We trust this example will be followed in other parts of the state.
The latest from Grant is that he told G. W. Childs that "Faden had been elected president and ought to have been inaugurated."
Jeff Davis has made the best campaign speech in the interest of the republican party of the season.
AUGUST MAGAZINES
ATLANTIC
This respectable magazine, so long the medium of expression for Emerson, Whittier, Longfellow, Lowell, Holmes, Hillard and other Boston literary men, is beginning to feel the impulse of a class of younger writers. In this number we do not even notice a fugitive poem from those who have given the Atlantic its reputation for scholarship and culture. Though such contributors must be greatly missed, yet their place is supplied in part by writers of broad culture, generous sympathies and nice literary taste.
The book opens with a very pleasant story by E. W. Olney. It is of course a love story, but is not insipid. Henry James, the deservedly popular novelist, contributes three chapters to his novel, "The European Moonshine," by T. B. Aldrich, is a racy burlesque, written in that easy, flowing style which gives such a charm to his writings. The plot is simple and the conversation piquant.
The poetry is fully up to the magazine standard. Miss Allen contributes a poem on "Fessenden's Garden" which contains some pleasant allusions to one of the purest statesmen and ablest legislators in the reconstruction period of our history. C. P. Cranch makes on the After Life. There are also poems on "Content and Lancelot."
The article "The Stage in Germany," by Sylvester Baxter, will be read with interest by those who are interested in raising the standard of our theatres. The view given of the German theatre is highly colored, and seems utopian, but suppose the writer is accurate in the facts stated. It is stated that there are but few changes in the companies connected with the different theatres, also that the companies present a great variety of plays, hardly ever giving the same play on two successive evenings. We find that one company has presented 4 plays of Lessing, 8 of Goethe, 13 of Schiller, 22 of Shakespeare, 2 of Sophocles and plays of five other classical writers during the last fifteen years, not to speak of almost innumerable plays by modern authors as for instance 19 of Pfeiffer and 21 by Benedix. To do this would require a versatility hardly human. Yet the essayist says the plays of Shakespeare are better presented in Germany than in Shakespeare's own language. The theatre of our own country is compared to that of Germany very much to the disadvantage of the former. Mr. Baxter thinks that such a theatre as the German can be established in this country, but we think the day is far distant. Mr. Baxter knows that a theatre presenting exclusively the classical drama, can not be made to pay. All experiments thus far have failed. His proposition to build a building out of private contributions and sufficiently endow it is hardly practicable. If the object is to educate and elevate, most people will prefer to use their money to endow institutions of learning. The article is interesting and suggestive, and can not fail to win sympathy for its author's aspiration for a higher standard. The "Growth of Conscience in the Decorative Arts" is a very carefully prepared paper and is an eloquent plea to artists to regard their art not as a business or accomplishment simply, but as only carrying with it certain moral responsibilities. It is stated that this is a purely modern idea. Ruskin who has written a good deal to inculcate this idea is quoted so aptly that we will give one of his honest, terse expressions.
"My notions are developed out of the necessities of my problem, they are not chosen because they are beautiful only, but because they are fit. Indeed they would not be beautiful for my use if they were not fit. There have been taught by experience to distrust my own intuitive fancies and predilections for this or that form, for this or that style. They seduce me from the truth. I have been taught to discipline my resources, to subject them to critical analysis and discussion within my own mind before using them, to lop off what is irrelevant to my theme, to give greater emphasis here, to distract attention there to harmonize the whole with the especial demands of the subject. I find that these conscientious processes, so far from weakening my fancy so far from diminishing the interest of my work in reality make my resources of design more available for my use, and render my compositions far more beautiful than any that I did before I had taught myself to reason. I now know how to be simple. I now know the value of self-denial in art.
There are several other interesting articles which will be acceptable to the general reader.
ST. NICHOLAS
It is wonderful that this magazine keeps up to the high standard with which it started on its career. But it retains its pristine freshness and vigor.
J. T. Trowbridge, who has contributed so much to the pleasure of children contributes a fairy tale in verse on "King Cheese." Miss Alcott continues her charming story on "Under the Lilacs." We can only say that the poems, stories and illustrations are all exceptionally good. Such literature as this placed in the hands of children will be a good antidote for dime novel trash.
SCRIBNER'S
The midsummer holiday number contains nearly two hundred pages of attractive reading matter splendidly illustrated. The article on William Cullen Bryant will probably attract most attention in this number. The sketch of his life and works is very good. The illustrations will however, prove fully as attractive as the sketch for in them we can see the spots that Bryant loved and where he communed with nature. His homes and surroundings also aid us greatly in our conception of the man.
Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen begins a story in this number which promises to be of unusual interest.
The contributors to this number present an unusual array of talent. Among them are Bret Harte, J. G. Holland, Henry James, Jr., C. P. Cranch, Edward Eggleston, E. C. Stedman, and J. T. Trowbridge.

Brutal Deed in Behalf of a Distressed Southern Lady.

The colored members of congress did not impress one in particularity good specimens of their race, except Bruce, the senator from Mississippi, who is a very fine, tall, muscular, full, stout and handsome man, said to be a Virginian by birth, and owned in early youth by the wealthy family of Halifax county, Va. He was frequently seen on the avenue with the white brethren and even on pleasant terms with them. From I could hear of him he must be a of uncommon intelligence, who has diligently since the emancipation improved himself, and made up for early disadvantages. Bruce's speech in regard to the future of the colored race in our country was admirable in its expression, and presented a contrast to the remarks of Mr. King and other gentlemen, who still under the effect of the color-prejuice, still in his bunk after he had lost his leg, he must be on deck in a basket to do the world's wonder for her loveliness and grace, a bewigged Mrs. Stewton succumbing to the dazzling vision that swayed the calculating policy of Napoleon III and won his callous heart.

When Charles Kemble and his wife visited Paris they met William Lamb and Lady Caroline at a dinner given by Lord Holland. It had been settled that the Lambes were to return to England on the following day, but a rumor of Byron's probable arrival being mentioned at the table Lady Caroline created a sensation among the guests by emphatically announcing her intention of remaining in Paris. William Lamb took the matter quietly, as was his wont but it may have had something to do with the scene that followed. Both the Lambes and Kembles occupied rooms in the Hotel Meurice, and as the carriages which took them home drew up at the same time, the latter saw William Lamb jump out, lift his wife's girlish figure in his arms, and carry her into the hotel, to avoid the deep gutter dividing the road from the trottoir. "I growled Kemble, as he watched this piece of gallantry, 'Should have put your ladyship in the gutter.' On reaching their respective sitting rooms, which had facing windows, unpurged and brilliantly lighted, the Kembles saw a curious domestic tableau. Mr. Lamb was seated in an arm-chair, Lady Caroline had propped herself on his knee; that position not expressing sufficient tenderness and humility, she slid to his feet. But some chance word perhaps turned the tide of her feelings, for when her husband rose, she sprang to her feet, and rushing round the room swept down vases, glasses, cups and saucers. All its breakable ornaments in a whirlwind of passion, her husband following, and vainly endeavoring to soothe her. In the midst of this tragic comedy down fell the curtain. The words 'Mad and the Duke' had left to the Lambes no sensation. William Lamb, a man of high social position was incapable, does not seem to have been much troubled by his Byron-worship. He cared nothing for the 'Thou art', his remarks bitterly in one of her letters, 'I might flout and go about with what men I pleased. He was privy to my affair with Lord Byron, and laughed at it. His indifference revenged him in a measure to everything. When I ride, play, and amuse him he loves me, in looks and in suffering he loves me. Which, being the case, probably means that when she was suddenly reasonable her husband was happy in her society but he had not always patience with her shapshaven Temple Bar.

Among the four-brained of Brussels there is none that commands such attention of the stranger as this diminutive figure, and there is none held in such reverence by the people of Brussels. It is a droll curiosity, which at the first sight, it is a picture of innocence and nature. He stands on his pedestal showing by his countenance that he is conscious of the fact that he is surrounded by spectators, and that some of them glance at him from behind their fans. It is the figure of a hearty and robust little boy, about six years of age, standing on a pedestal over a half circle basin, and a he has been frequently stolen or defaced, an ornamental iron railing incloses both the basin and the statue. But Le Mannekin is an historical character, and he has stood for four hundred years in his present position. The first statue was in stone, but 260 years ago it was replaced by the present bronze figure by Duquesnoy. There are various legends connected with it, the best accepted of which is that the son of a distinguished man had been lost for some time, having strayed away. This part of Brussels was then a thicket, and it was on the spot that the fountain was subsequently erected by his father that he was found, after diligent search just in the position and in the act which the statue represents. In gratitude for his recovery the fountain was erected, and has stood during all the vicissitudes of war and the changes of government. It has been from time immemorial an object of popular affection. On grand holidays it has always been the custom of Le Mannekin to wear a costume, and an officer is regularly appointed and paid by the city council of Brussels, whose duty is to dress him on these occasions, and to keep him in repair and in running order. Fulton's Brimstone American Letters.

young lady who holds a clerkship in the department told me an incident connected with Senator Bruce, which rates both the wonderful changes that by the whirl of time, and the bit of which is over the characteristic of long suffering African. While the red carpet big government existed, Mississippi very heavy municipal taxes levied in the towns, and some dispute between a gentleman, who had one of the wealthy citizens of Bruce's, and the Yankee mayor of the town, which he had in regard to the town thereof. The Mississippiian refused to pay his quota because the city had to make repairs necessary to certain of the walls surrounding his lot. The controversy continued for time until at last in the absence of one of the property, deputies appointed by the mayor went into the house, without ceremony carried off the piano and other pieces of furniture which were once sold for taxes. The family suffered many losses from the war, his act when related to him by his experienced the hot-headed wrath that he went at once to the mayor's and shot him dead. He was tried and sentenced to be hanged, but the authorities and being released on a parole left the town by the advice of the mayor. The family moved to here, where they lived in great poverty while, and the unhappy Mississippi sunk under his many cares and
